The Vestitorul (formerly Standard) Telephone Factory in Bucharest has a special radio section whose production is believed to be intended solely for the army, because neither radios nor radio parts from the factory appear on the market. At an exhibition of Rumanian industry, the factory displayed a radio transmitter with two transmitter tubes. The case, one meter high and 70 centimeters wide, was made of iron and had three dials and three knobs on the front. The transmitter was poorly finished and is not believed to be the model now in production.
